Market update

In the UK, as widely expected the Bank of England's Monetary Policy Committee (MPC) meeting early in May implemented a further 0.25% increase in the policy rate of interest, taking it to 1.00%. The MPC's announcement was accompanied by conspicuously bearish remarks on the outlook for economic growth in the UK, with forecasts of a contraction in 2022 and close to zero growth over the next 24 months being even more pessimistic than forecasts recently published by other commentators including the International Monetary Fund. The MPC's view was significantly informed by its belief that the squeeze on consumers' real incomes would suppress demand – it once again raised its forecast for inflation, to a peak of over 10% in autumn 2022.

Subsequently the latest employment data, showing a record low in the number of people looking for work, reinforced market expectations that the Bank would have little choice but to continue to tighten monetary policy despite the UK's weak economic growth. Gilt yields rose in response, and sterling recovered some of its recent losses against the US dollar.
